Excerpt: . GOLD MINES AT CANNES. 173 more than 50 per cent over English prices, so that with care and economy small fortunes are rapidly made, which, when put into trade, often raise a humble mechanic to the position of a rich merchant. Such is the real history of fortunes, and not, as is generally supposed, a lucky gold digging, which in a few months has realized thousands. Some have made large sums at the diggings, and thousands are now earning a livelihood at them; but I feel satisfied that prudence and foresight in commercial speculations, at a time when the demand commanded high prices, has raised more people to affluence than the gold discoveries, which set the whole system in motion. There is at present a French company that have received certain concessions in Darien on the Rio Grande, whose object is to open...
