Excerpt: . the delight of golf is the first fine careless rapture of the tee shot. Therefore, the best courses are those which do not continually cramp the drive by meticulous side hazards. Give a man plenty of space off the tee, but let the shot to the green be more confined, so that the fine driver who is also a thoughtful player will gain some advantage by hitting his tee shot in a certain direction, o o o Golfers who have become accustomed to the cut-and-dried methods of links-making in England and America will be surprised to find that in Scotland bunkers are left lying about indiscriminately very much as nature placed them in the beginning. Occasionally a small bunker is found right in the center of the course about 190 yards from the tee, just where a fine drive is likely to land....
