Brand New Book  Print on Demand .An excerpt from the beginning of the book: Every rich man, every poor man, ought to make his will. This assertion will seem strange and unwarranted to a good many people, particularly to those to whom the word estate means a large property. The making of a will is assumed to be the business of those who, when they die, expect to leave a good deal of wealth behind them. It seems a superfluity in the case of the man who has only a pittance to dispose of. As a matter of fact, to a rich man a will is merely a luxury, a convenience; his estate can get along without it. To the man of moderate means it is an absolute necessity. Let us look at it. John Doe is a struggling individual, too poor by far to have his will drawn: at least that's what he thinks. He dies unexpectedly. He dies without a will. He leaves, we'll say, a wife, and a child under age. He owns at the time of his death, say, five hundred dollars in a savings bank, and a lot on which some day he hoped to build, - a lot worth perhaps another five hundred. So we'll put John Doe's estate down at one thousand dollars, half realty, half personality. Don't forget that he dies without a will. His wife finds herself in a position where she needs to draw on the savings bank account: perhaps she'll need it all. She finds herself in a position where it is advisable to sell the vacant lot. When John Doe dies her first legal step is...
